

ACTIVE CITIZENSHIP

Day 1: What I did: Joined a barangay clean-up drive.

Why I did it: To help keep our environment clean and healthy.

How it contributes to society: A clean place helps prevent diseases and makes people proud of their community.

Day 2: What I did: Signed an online petition about climate action.

Why I did it: Because I believe the youth should take part in protecting the planet.

How it contributes to society: It helps raise awareness and pushes leaders to act for the environment.

Day 3: What I did: Helped an elderly neighbor carry her groceries.

Why I did it: To show kindness and respect to others, especially the elderly.

How it contributes to society: Small acts of care make our community more united and peaceful.

Discussion (Forum): Question: “What does active citizenship look like in a digital world?” Active citizenship in the digital world means using social media and the internet responsibly. It means sharing truthful information, avoiding hate or fake news, and supporting good causes online. A good digital citizen uses technology to educate others, promote kindness, and help solve problems in society.
