Chosen Issue: Misinformation in Social Media

In today's world, many people get their information from the internet. That's why it's important to be careful about what we share online. For me, I always make sure to check if the news is true before posting or sharing it. This helps stop the spread of fake news that can harm others.

I also try to teach my friends and classmates about fact-checking and thinking first before posting. By doing this, I can help others become more responsible online too. I also support schools or barangays that include media literacy in their programs because learning how to spot fake news is important for everyone.

Paulo Freire said that education helps people become free and aware. When we teach others about the truth, we help fight lies and confusion. Emmanuel Levinas also said we are responsible for others, which means we should protect them from the harm caused by false information.

To create change, I must start with myself. I will be more careful about what I share and encourage others to do the same. Small actions like telling the truth and spreading awareness can help build a more honest and responsible society.
