

The common good
means helping others
and working together
so everyone can live well.

Reflection:

The common good means helping others and working together so everyone can live well. In my community, like helping by joining clean-up drives and promoting proper waste segregation. Keeping our surroundings clean helps protect everyone's health. And also join school donation drives and charity events, which help people in need and bring the community together. For me, doing good is not only about big actions but also about small acts of kindness every day being respectful, honest, and caring. These actions make life better for others and for myself. As Aristotle said, humans are social beings who live best when they cooperate and care for one another. When we work together and think beyond ourselves, we help build a community that grows in peace and fairness.
